This Historic Site became Canada's first administered National Historic Site in 1917. Fort Anne now stands as a part of the traditional homeland of the Mi'kmaq. In the early years, a succession of Scottish, French, and English settlers fought for this prize on the banks of the Annapolis River in Nova Scotia, often dragging Mi'kmaq into their dispute. Fort Anne was the site of the thirteen attacks, seven change of hands, and the ratification of the Treaty of Boston.

Next one is the Port Royal National Historic Site. This site features a reconstruction of Samuel de Champlain's Habitation. This is one of the earliest European settlements in North America. Fact and fiction blend to reveal the romance of the Land of Evangeline at Grand Pre-National Historic Site which is the final one. Here you will see the powerful monument which is in the heart of a UNESCO World Heritage Site that unites the French Acadian people and memorializes their tragic upheaval.
